reductio ad absurdum

The two classes of results which are distinguished by our test of significance are, on the one hand, those which show a significant discrepancy from a certain hypothesis; … ; and on the other hand, results which show no significant discrepancy from this hypothesis.

–R. A Fisher "The Design of Experiments, 8. The Null Hypothesis"